Title

indent → Time Travel.
Three things sound better.

I missed your character in the story!! 😊

PR

Dinosaurs. Death. In Ray Bradberry's "A Sound of Thunder," the butterfly effect came to life as Eckels steps off the path and damaged the past, changing life as we know it. Travis, a Time Safari guide, kills Eckels for messing up everything. Eckels should have taken extra regard...

Awkward. (Maybe "Travis was justified...")

double space

Eckels made a huge mistake by stepping off the path and killing a butterfly, so in Travis' defense, he had no choice but to punish him by putting him to death. Since Eckels was warned about what would happen if he stepped off the path, he should have taken extra precautions.

PA

Because since he didn't, his actions resulted in death.

When dealing with multiple characters of the same gender, make sure "who" you are talking about is clear.

Another reason why Travis is right for killing Eckels is that Eckels deserves some form of punishment. Whether it's death or not, he definitely got what he deserved. The government in present day wouldn't just give Eckels a slap on the wrist. It would do one of two things: put in in prison for life, or go ahead and kill him.

PR/PA

Although Eckels deserves a very harsh punishment, some people might argue that killing is never the answer. If this were a real life event, there would be millions of people protesting against probably killing Eckels. Travis would most definitely be put in prison for life for murdering Eckels, ~~as well~~ ^{and}

~~as~~ ^{would be} Time Safari Inc. being shut down.

All that being said, ^{was} ~~in conclusion~~, Travis ~~is~~ ^{on} completely right. Before they even left ~~for~~ their safari trip, Travis told Eckels that there would be serious consequences if he stepped off the path. Knowing that, Eckels should have taken extra regard ⁱⁿ to his every move. [Furthermore, it was Travis' decision, and that's what he chose.]

PR/PA

Good!
attempt!

What gives his decision-making more weight? This might have belonged in one of your body paragraphs to strengthen an argument.

- Verb shift (PR = present; PA = past).
 - ↳ Since the events of the story are decided, stick with past tense when describing them.
- Thesis statement
 - ↳ A thesis statement should be clear and focused. No...
- Contractions
 - ↳ Avoid contractions when writing formal essays.

Overall: With a little "tweaking," this would be even better and stronger.
Good job!
